Passage D:

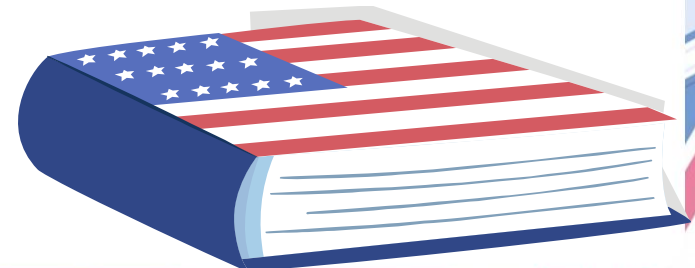

Bob congress

Career experts have developed these strategies for holding on to a job.

Volunteer for new responsibilities, push your ideas, and make sure everyone knows you to be a good worker, learn everything that could help you do your job better, learn more about marketing, know about changes and new directions in the company.

You need to be able to communicate, improve your speaking and writing skills, make a positive impact on your boss by arriving early and working late and dress in a businesslike way.

Make yourself so valuable that the company won't want to lose you

Passage E:

Career changes make a difference

An American university has recently carried out a survey into why people decide to change direction in their career. The results show that 61% of the people interviewed would prefer to do something more useful with their lives.

Jeff Short, whose original aim when he set up his own company was to make money. He realized that something was missing in his life.

Many of them are part-time so that you only have to give up your current job once you become qualified.
